

Dear Sir or Madam,

History has a way of swinging strongly based on seemingly small events. The erosion of a truly independent press in America is surely one of such changes that are at an inflection point. If Sinclair is allowed to air a highly one-sided political piece, commercial free, right before the election, and if such an event actually results in the winning by the favored candidate, history will come down hard on those who allowed it to happen. This event will set a dangerous precedence which I believe will steer America down a course in contrary to the fundamental principles on which this great country was founded. Those at the FCC may keep their jobs, but posterity will judge them harshly.

Your truly,

Winston S. Chen
